A RIVER RUNNING THROUGH YOU

ILLUSTRATED BY

elin manon

It has been raining on Earth for four billion years.
The water flowing in your river
today is the same that fell then.

Embark on a never-ending voyage to explore some very old questions – questions so old that they have stories for answers. From mountain springs and vast oceans to rivers in the sky and streams within our own bodies, this enchanting book spirals through time and space and reminds us that water is more than just a resource. It is part of who we are.

Written by award-winning author Amy-Jane Beer, this sparkling text is a perfect introduction to rivers, nature and our place within it.

and the rivers running through them

MAGIC CAT PUBLISHING

Have you ever lingered on a riverbank watching the water flow, and wondered where it comes from, or where it might be going?

These are very old questions.

And old questions often have stories for answers.

If you could follow the water everywhere it goes, you would find yourself on a never-ending journey through time and space.

A river is water's chance to dance under the Sun,
and to speak its stories.

What might it tell you about the places it has been?

The water in your river has crossed many oceans.

Rivers in the ocean are called currents and gyres.
They are highways for creatures making epic journeys of their own.

Seawater is salty because it has spent billions of years collecting minerals washed from the land by all the rivers of the world.
