

Lovereading4kids.co.uk is a book website created for parents and children to make choosing books easy and fun

Opening extract from

Mango & Bambang Tapir All at Sea

Written by Polly Faber

Illustrated by Clara Vulliamy

Published by

Walker Books Ltd

All Text is Copyright © of the Author and/or Illustrator

Please print off and read at your leisure.

Churros

Heel-stamping, handclapping master of flamenco.

Untrustworthy Collector of the Unusual.

For Andy, who knows how to dance, with love. P. F.

For Leah, daughter and dearest pal, with love. C. V.

This is a work of fiction. Names, characters, places and incidents are either the product of the author's imagination or, if real, are used fictitiously. All statements, activities, stunts, descriptions, information and material of any other kind contained herein are included for entertainment purposes only and should not be relied on for accuracy or replicated as they may result in injury.

First published 2016 by Walker Books Ltd 87 Vauxhall Walk, London SE11 5HJ

24681097531

Text © 2016 Polly Faber Illustrations © 2016 Clara Vulliamy

The right of Polly Faber and Clara Vulliamy to be identified as author and illustrator respectively of this work has been asserted by them in accordance with the Copyright,

Designs and Patents Act 1988

This book has been typeset in Veronan

Printed and bound in China

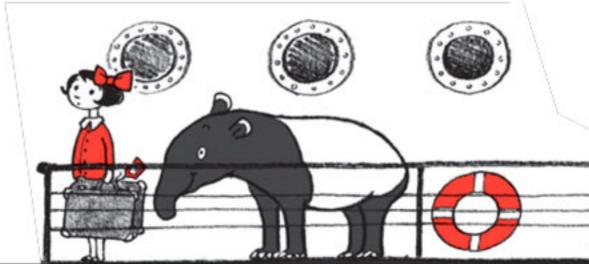

All rights reserved. No part of this book may be reproduced, transmitted or stored in an information retrieval system in any form or by any means, graphic, electronic or mechanical, including photocopying, taping and recording, without prior written permission from the publisher.

British Library Cataloguing in Publication Data: a catalogue record for this book is available from the British Library

ISBN 978-1-4063-6147-6

www.wolker.co.uk

POLLY FABER CLARA VULLIAMY

Contents

The Museum of the Unusual

78-113

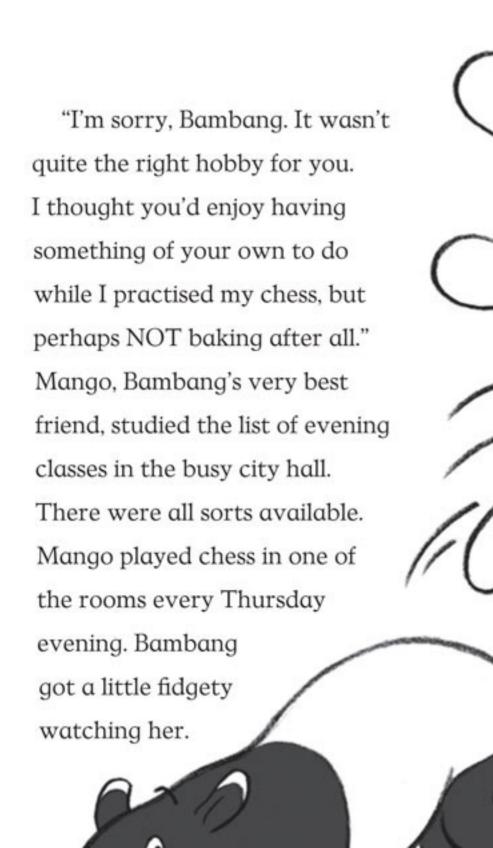

"The problem is my feet.

They don't seem to be very good at managing fiddly things,

Mango. And my snout is too busy wanting a taste to hold on to the whisk firmly." Bambang looked sad as he came out of the Fancy Cakes and Bakes class. He also looked rather less tapir-like than usual. His normally black stripes were dusted with quite a lot of flour and icing sugar, while his white stripe, snout and ears seemed to be coated with a mixture of chocolate, butter and little sugar flowers. If only it had been a class about becoming a cake instead of making one.

And that sometimes meant he got into a little trouble.
There had been an incident with a water cooler only last week...

"Oh!" said Mango, looking down the list.

"What about dancing Bambang? Your legs are lovely – and you've got more of them than most people, too!"

"Dancing?" said Bambang. "Oh, yes! I might like dancing!"

There were a few different dance classes. Mango was uncertain which to choose. After cleaning him up, she took Bambang upstairs to ballet – the one she was most familiar with. "Ballet didn't suit me – my legs turned out more karate-ish – but you're a different shape."

In a bare room, with mirrors on the wall, a line of neat children in tights and leotards were holding on to a bar.

Mango watched them bend their knees, sink down and push up again, in time to music from a slightly out of tune piano. A very straight lady with a very tight bun was walking back and forth observing. She had a thin stick and occasionally she prodded bits of children that were sticking out in places they shouldn't be. Mango suddenly knew this wasn't going to be right for Bambang, either. She wasn't entirely certain he had knees, let alone which way they bent. She didn't want Bambang to get prodded.

"Actually, Bambang..." she began, but before she could finish the straight lady spotted them and rapped her stick sharply on the floor.

14

"You! Child and animal! Come to the bar now, please, and begin your exercises." She was the kind of lady, with the kind of stick, who expected obedience. Mango and Bambang obeyed.

It didn't take long for both to wish they hadn't. Mango's worry that Bambang might get prodded by the prodding stick was quite right. He got prodded a lot. Having four legs again seemed to offer disappointingly few advantages. When Bambang did get one of his sets of knees to bend the right way the other set would go in the opposite direction. His legs seemed to like getting in the way of each other.

Poor Bambang got more and more droopy around the snout and ears. "Are you sure this is dancing, Mango?

I thought it would be jollier."

Mango felt awful.

"Naughty toes! NAUGHTY TOES!"
the lady with the bun kept shouting.
Bambang looked down at his feet baffled. A tapir's toes are splendidly grippy in mud, but not built for *pointe*work. It seemed unfair to call them naughty when they couldn't help it in the slightest.