Forests are home to all kinds of woodland creatures and are closely packed with tall trees. The forest in this book has warm summers and cold winters, where the trees lose their leaves. Forests can be found around the world, from America to Europe and New Zealand. They provide shelter for animals in tree hollows, trunks and branches. The trees in forests are cut down and used to make paper, so we need to be careful to recycle the paper that we use. Forests are important for all life on Earth.
