BIRD HOUSE

A lift-the-flap book of discovery

Bird houses come in all shapes and sizes. They are usually wooden and provide a safe shelter for birds who are without a nest or need extra protection in the wild.

Birds may also struggle to find food or water when the temperature drops or if trees are cut down. Let's have a look at the different ways we can help birds survive...

DUCK HOUSES are floating structures, found on lakes and ponds, or fixed shelters built on dry land.
Male ducks are called DRAKES.
Do you know what baby ducks are called?
Female ducks are known as HENS.
A group of ducks on water is called a RAFT.

There are lots of different homes for birds. Can you remember which bird lives in each?

You can help to make your garden a more bird-friendly place to be:

Provide a bird feeder so birds can find food all year round.

Have a freshwater bird bath for birds to splash around in.

Put a bird house in a tree so small nesting birds have somewhere to stay.
