Ada Lovelace was born in England to a mother who loved maths and a father who loved poetry.

Ada's father left England when she was very little and never returned. Her mother was away a lot, too.

So young Ada spent a lot of time at her grandparents' house. A cat called Mrs Puff kept her company.

Left alone, Ada's imagination took flight. She started to dream of machines with wings that could move in any direction.

When Ada's mother came to visit, she didn't like her imaginary inventions. She wanted her to concentrate on maths and logic – and nothing else!
