THE WORRIES

SOHAL FINDS A FRIEND

Written and illustrated by
JION SHEIBANI

PUFFIN

Sohal was full of worries. He had been for as long as he could remember. His parents and teachers often called him ‘a worrier’, but he wasn’t really sure what that meant. It didn’t sound good, though, and this made Sohal worry even more.

The worst time for worries was at bedtime, when it felt like the darkness outside Sohal's window was inside his tummy. As soon as Sohal tried to fall asleep the darkness would grow and grow, until it filled every part of his body. It made him toss and turn and wriggle and itch. It made the worries in his head spin faster and grow BIGGER, until he felt like the only thing he could do was cry.

‘Don't worry, darling!’ said his mum one night. ‘Relax! I'll sing you a song! Twinkle, twinkle, little staaaaar —’

‘No! I don't want that song!’ Sohal sulked. ‘It's babyish! The only music I like is rap.’

‘Right . . . well, why don’t we try some calming breathing?’ Dad said in his chirpiest voice. ‘That’s what we do in my yoga class. Just breathe in . . .

Breathe out . . .

Breathe in . . .

Breathe out.

Now spread out like a starfish . . . and imagine . . . you’re sinking into the soft, golden sand . . .’

‘Sinking?!’ Sohal yelped, jerking upright.

‘I don’t want to SINK!’

‘OK, OK, let’s just . . . count some sheep instead,’ Mum said quickly. ‘One, two, three . . .’

Sohal closed his eyes and imagined some nice fluffy sheep jumping over a fence in a sunny green field. However, the nice fluffy sheep quickly turned into . . .

MUTANT ALIEN SHEEP!

And they were running from a

GIANT ROBOT WOLF!

In a storm!
