They're schoolboys. They're brothers. And, as of this week, they are both newly authorised special agents of R.A.I.D. — the international agency for Robotics Analysis, Intelligence and Defence. Today we are very fortunate to feature a rare and exclusive interview with Alex and Freddy Sharma, the "Mega Robo Bros" themselves.

We meet in a cafe on the Mile End Road. Alex (12) and Freddy (6) attended by their adoptive parents — R.A.I.D. chief scientific officer Dr Nita Sharma and her husband, Michael Sharma. Michael goes to order coffees for the adults and ice creams for the boys, while I begin talking to Alex and Freddy, conscious all the while of their mother's steely gaze on me.

"So what's it like, being robots?" I ask.

I am immediately embarrassed by the inanity of my own question, and Alex seems to agree, his big blue eyes fixing me with a distinctly unimpressed look.

Freddy is less reserved.

"It is awesome! We can fly, and we are super strong and stuff, and also we have lasers!"
