Above the misty mountains,
below a glowing moon,
lived a lonely little Witchling with a wobbly, knobby broom . . .

And a squeaky, leaky cauldron,
and a not-so-pointy hat,
and a spell book full of spellings, in a cave of inky bats.

Now, the Little Witchling didn't mind
the beetles in her bed,

and she didn't mind
the drip,
drip,
drip

of water on her head.

But deep inside
her Witchling heart
there was an empty space,

"I wish I had a friend," she sighed,
"to fill this lonely place."

"I can't grow one!
I can't sew one! Hmmm . . ."
The Witchling scratched her head,
"I know!" she cried,
"I'll cast a spell . . .

and MAGIC one instead!"

So she opened up her spell book and she checked her shopping list, for all the things she'd need to weave a friendship-making wish . . .

“At last,” the Little Witchling hummed, “my spell is almost ready!
All that’s missing is some furriness from . . . Oh!

A One-Eyed TEDDY?"
