

Alex T. Smith

MACMILLAN CHILDREN'S BOOKS

For Winston and his mummy and daddy, Sarah and Simon. You can't make old friends. X

First published 2018 by Macmillan Children's Books

This edition published 2021 by Macmillan Children's Books an imprint of Pan Macmillan The Smithson, 6-9 Briset Street, London, EC1M 5NR EU representative: Macmillan Publishers Ireland Ltd, 1st Floor, The Liffey Trust Centre, 117–126 Sheriff Street Upper Dublin 1, D01 YC43 Associated companies throughout the world www.panmacmillan.com

> Copyright © Alex T. Smith 2018 ISBN 978-1-5290-8085-8

The right of Alex T. Smith to be identified as the author and illustrator of this work has been asserted by him in accordance with the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988.

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted, in any form or by any means (electronic, mechanical, photocopying, recording or otherwise), without the prior written permission of the publisher.

Pan Macmillan does not have any control over, or any responsibility for, any author or third party websites referred to in or on this book.

 $1\,3\,5\,7\,9\,8\,6\,4\,2$

A CIP catalogue record for this book is available from the British Library.

Design by Alison Still

Printed and bound in CPI Group (UK) Ltd, Croydon CR0 4YY

This book is sold subject to the condition that it shall not, by way of trade or otherwise, be lent, resold, hired out, or otherwise circulated without the publisher's prior consent in any form of binding or cover other than that in which it is published and without a similar condition including this condition being imposed on the subsequent purchaser.

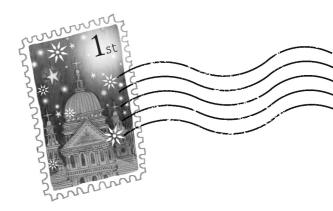

How Winston Delivered Christmas is a book written in 24¹/₂ chapters. You can read it as quickly as you want to (maybe even gobble it all up in one go!) or you can start reading it on the 1st of December, and then read one chapter a day in the run-up to the 25th, finishing with the ½ chapter at the end on Christmas Day itself. It could be fun to get cosy and read the story all by yourself, or you could share it with a grown-up. Maybe have a biscuit at the same time. Books and biscuits go so nicely together, I think.

Alex T. Smith

CONTENTS

	A VERY IMPORTANT MISSION	11
N	A MYSTERIOUS FLYING OBJECT	21
	AN ENVELOPE OUT OF PLACE
	WINSTON SETS OFF	.35
	WINDOW SHOPPING	.43
	THE ROOM IN THE RAFTERS	.52
	THE JOLLY HOLIDAY TRAVEL AGENTS	.60
	THINKING BIG THOUGHTS	.68
	MINCE PIES AND MOVIES	.78
	AN IMPORTANT CLUE	.85
	A COSY BED MADE OF STRAW	.94
	SPLASH AND SPLATTER!	102
	AS FLAT AS A PANCAKE (ALMOST)
	YOU AREN'T A SALMON	.114
	PURVEYORS OF FINE GOODS SINCE 1847	.126
	TEAMWORK	.134
	DILLY-DALLYING	.144
	STINKY AND THEREFORE TASTY	153
	EDUARDO FROMAGE
	A NIGHT-TIME FEAST	167
	CLOCKWORK	175
	THE GREAT FLYING MOUSE	.182
	A LIGHT IN THE SKY	.192
	THE END	.198
	HOT BUTTERED TOAST	.207

A VERY IMPORTANT MISSION

was crowded and noisy.

There were exactly twelve minutes left before it was supposed to close for the holidays, but people were still shuffling in through the door hoping to pick up just one last present for a special someone, or to gawp at all the jolly toys sitting smartly on the shelves and admire the enormous doll's house in the window.

One person not looking at any of that was Oliver. His mum and dad owned the shop. He had been helping them all day – fetching and carrying and generally being very busy indeed. But now he quickly ducked out from under the counter where he'd been wrapping parcels. He flung his scarf around his neck and wiggled his way through the crowds and out into the busy high street.

He was on a VERY important mission.

It was late afternoon, the moon was already up and snow had started to fall. Hundreds of snowflakes twirled through the air like ballerinas before landing daintily on the blanket of snow that had fallen over the past few days.

Oliver crunched down the street. He rushed past the bakery and the butcher's shop, sidestepped customers spilling out of the general store and the cheesemonger's, and swerved neatly around the ladies bustling out of the shop that sold fancy hats and ribbons. The entire night fizzed with Christmassy excitement.

14

On the corner of the street a brass band was standing in the cold, filling the evening air with a jazzy, parpy rendition of Oliver's favourite Christmas song.

stopped and listened for He а moment before remembering his mission. He weaved his way around the final knot of shoppers (their arms piled high with boxes and bags) and stopped in front of a bright red letterbox. He rummaged in his pockets.

They were full, as usual, with all the Extremely Important Things you need to have on your person when you are eight years old:

• A couple of paperclips (twisted open into wiggly strips of metal).

• Some string tangled up into several useless knots.

• The stub of a blunt pencil.

• Fluff.

• And a dry wrinkled old conker collected in October.

All of this was Vital.

Eventually Oliver found what he was actually looking for – an envelope. It wasn't too badly crumpled and he'd written the address on the front in his very best handwriting. He'd left it a bit late to send but he crossed his fingers and hoped it would get where it needed to go in time.

He was just about to put it in the slot on the letterbox when someone called his name.

'Oliver! Oliver?'

It was his mum. She was standing in the doorway of their shop, waving at him.

'Hurry up! I need your help wrapping these last few teddy bears!' she cried. 'And it's much too cold to be outside without your coat on!'

'Coming!' called Oliver, waving back.

He quickly popped his letter in the box and scurried back down the street into the busy shop.

Now whether Oliver's envelope got caught up in the chilly breeze or was found by a shimmer of winter magic that was fizzing about that night nobody knows, but the letter didn't stay in the letterbox for long. When no one was looking, it slid back out and danced through the air and down the street, floating along between the snowflakes.