It Fell from the Sky

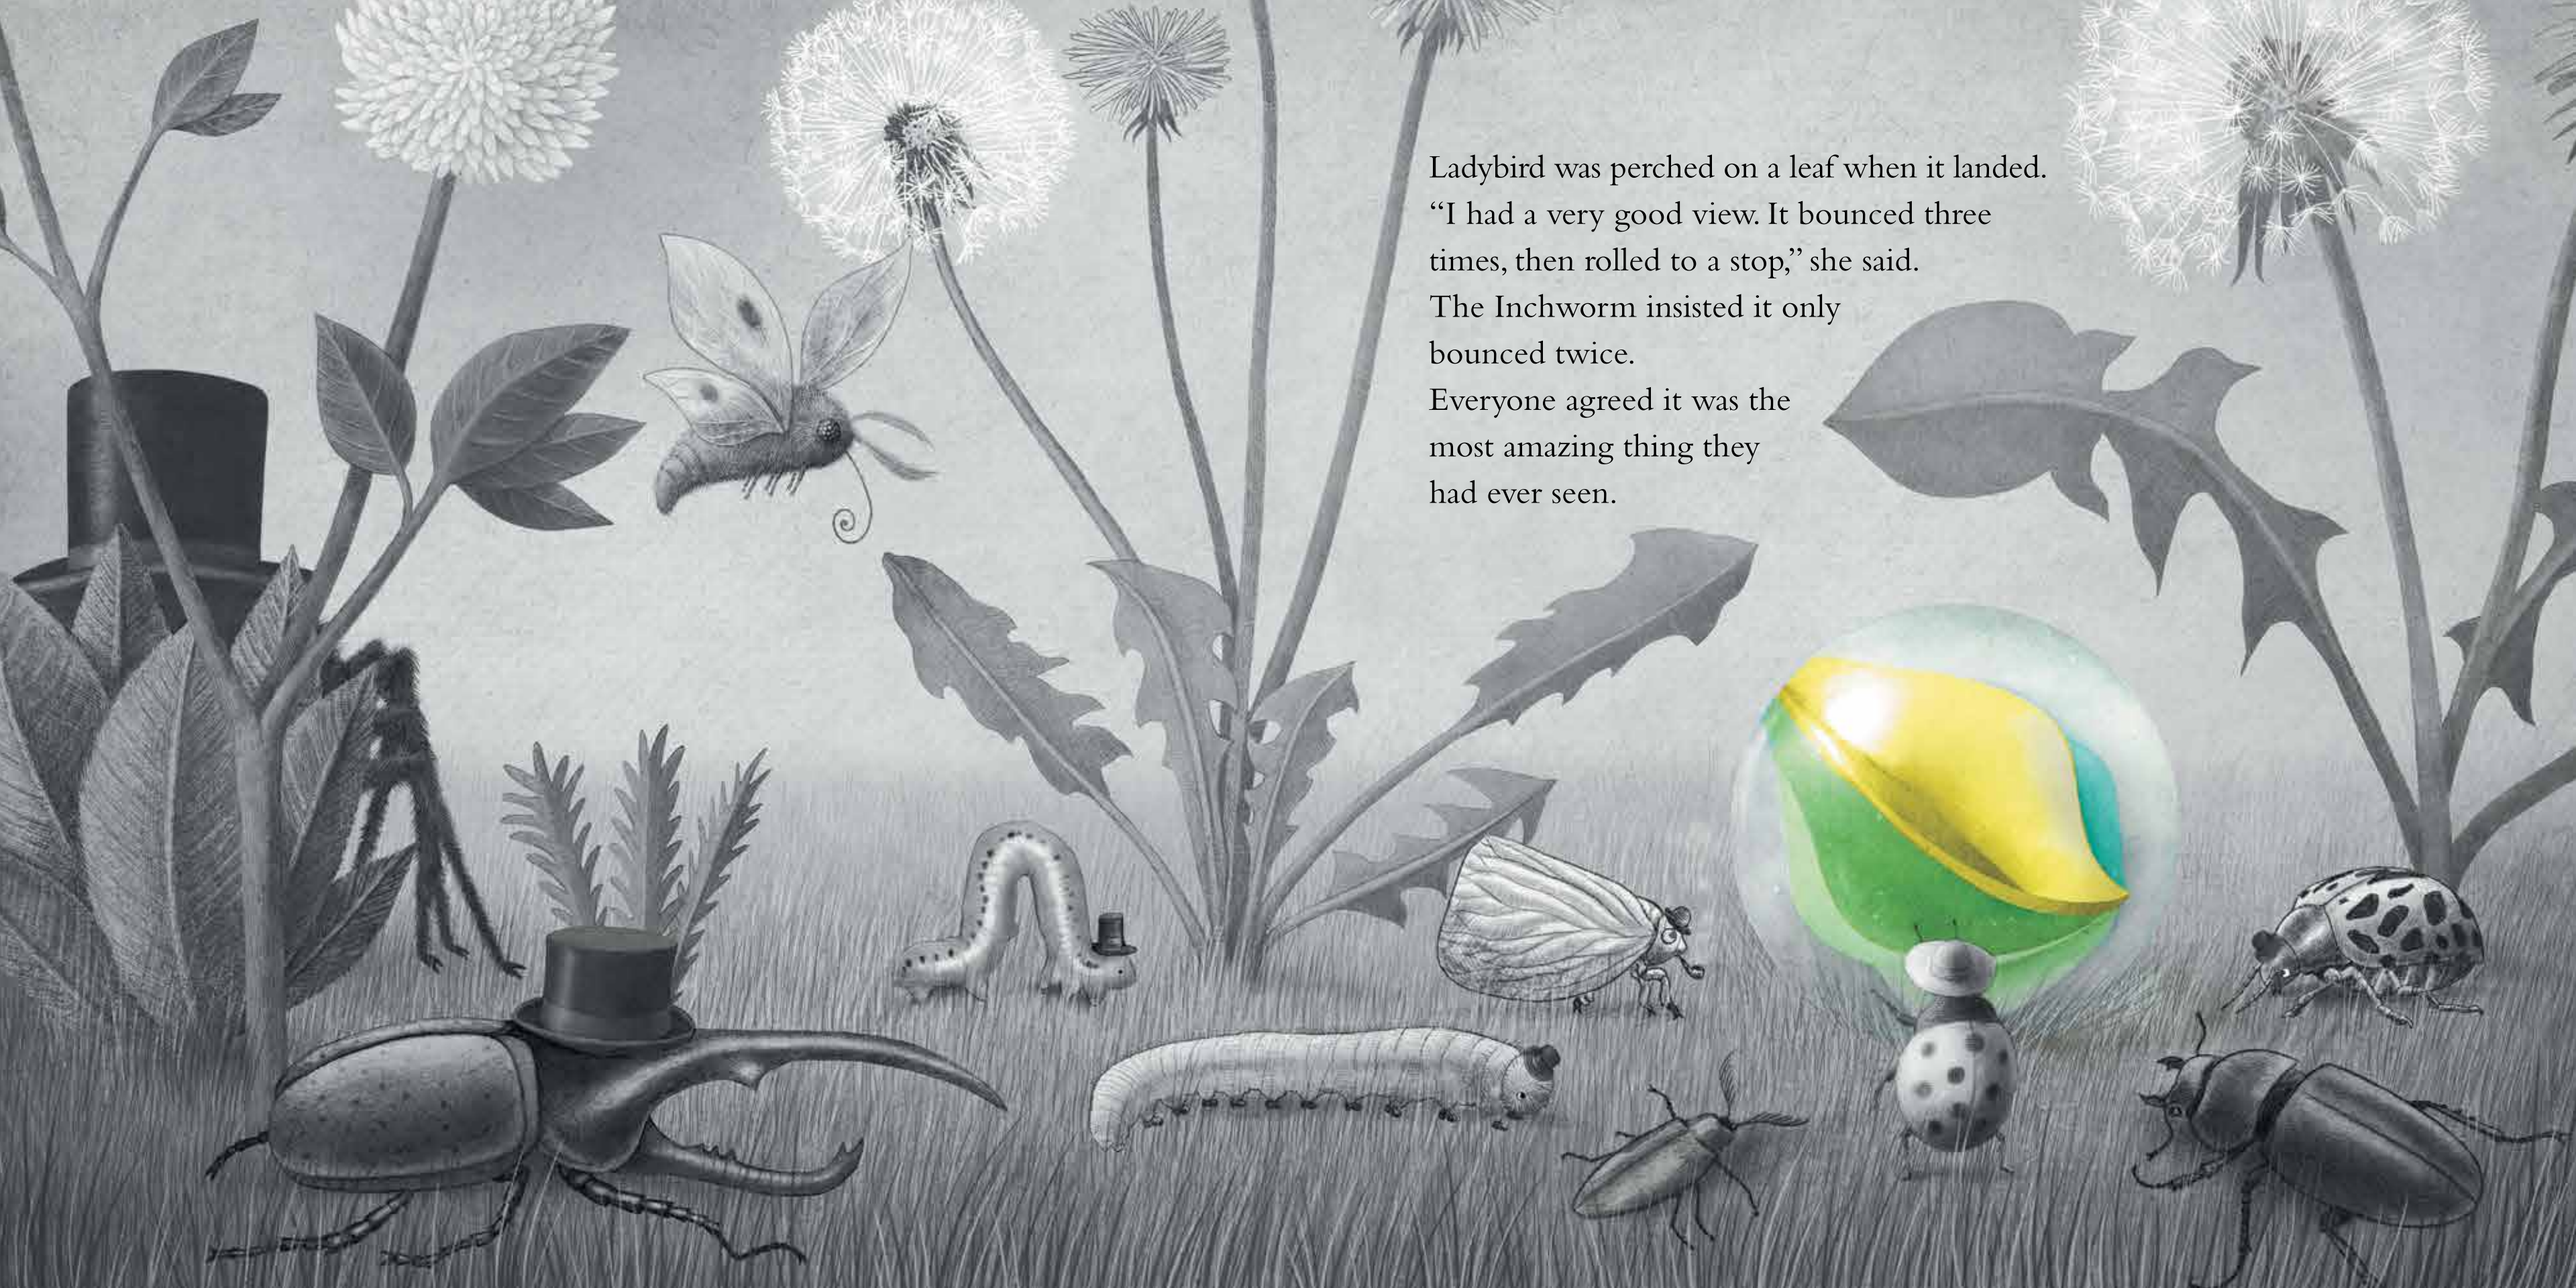

THE FAN BROTHERS

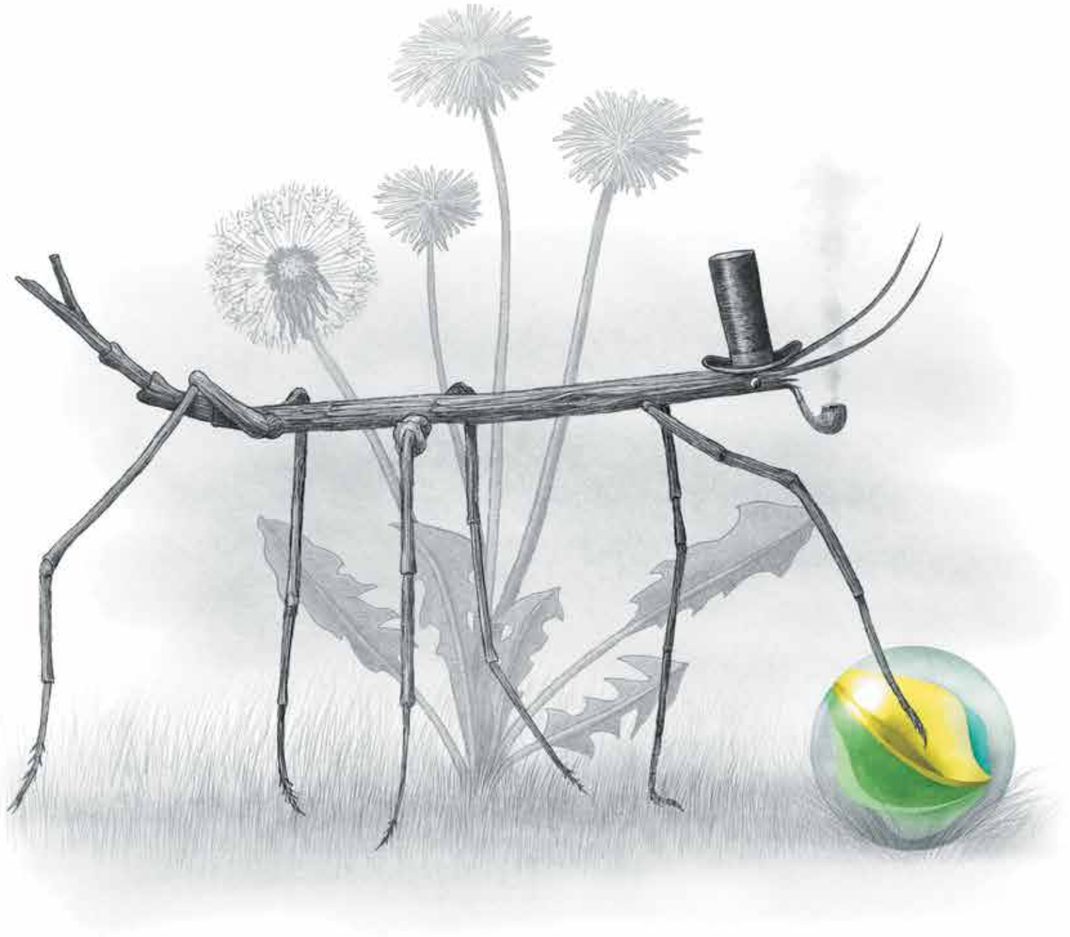

Frances Lincoln
Children's Books

It fell from the sky on a Thursday.

Ladybird was perched on a leaf when it landed.
"I had a very good view. It bounced three times, then rolled to a stop," she said.
The Inchworm insisted it only bounced twice.
Everyone agreed it was the most amazing thing they had ever seen.

"Remarkable," said the Walking Stick.
He was happy to find something even stranger than himself in the garden.

A Frog assumed it was a gobstopper.
He didn't like how it tasted.

The Dung Beetle tried to roll it, but it was too heavy.

The Stink Bug doubted that it fell from the sky at all.
He thought it might have grown from the ground,
like a flower.

Finally, the wise Grasshopper was consulted.
"It is not of earthly origins," he concluded.
"Most likely a fallen star, a comet,
or perhaps even a small planet."

The Luna Moth knew it was not a comet or a star or a planet.
It was a magical chrysalis that needed to be kept warm.
