

STAND TALL, STAND PROUD AND SHINE!

"Officially a new favourite."

TOLÁ
OKOGWU

"I loved it!"

LISA
THOMPSON

MY NAME IS
SUNSHINE
SIMPSON

G.M. LINTON

MY NAME IS
SUNSHINE
SIMPSON

“A book as warm and radiant as sunshine itself!”

Lisa Thompson, author of The Goldfish Boy

“An utterly brilliant book that had me laughing and crying in equal measure.”

Tolá Okogwu, author of Onyeka and the Academy of the Sun

“A beautiful, heartwarming hug of a book about the power of self-acceptance. I defy anyone not to fall in love with Sunshine!”

Hannah Gold, author of The Last Bear

“A delightful story that manages to be both sincerely heartfelt and sparkingly funny in equal measure.”

L.D. Lapinski, author of The Strangeworlds Travel Agency

“A huge, uplifting hug with a message that says: be yourself; be proud of who you are.”

Jen Carney, author of The Accidental Diary of B.U.G.

“Sunshine lives up to her name – she's charming and hilarious.”

Aisha Bushby, author of A Pocketful of Stars

“This is a very special book.”

Serena Patel, author of Anisha, Accidental Detective

“Powerful and poignant, hilarious and heartwarming. I'm just so in love with this book.”

Rashmi Sirdeshpande, author of How To Be Extraordinary

*For my children,
and in loving memory of my parents,
Lester and Rena.
Without you, this book would not be.*

First published in the UK in 2023 by Usborne Publishing Limited, Usborne House, 83-85 Saffron Hill, London EC1N 8RT, England, usborne.com

Usborne Verlag, Usborne Publishing Limited, Prüfeninger Str. 20, 93049 Regensburg, Deutschland VK Nr. 17560

Text copyright © G. M. Linton, 2023.

The right of G. M. Linton to be identified as the author of this work has been asserted by her in accordance with the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act, 1988.

Cover and internal character illustrations by Fuuji Takashi © Usborne Publishing Limited, 2023.

Additional interior illustrations by Emily Bornoff © Usborne Publishing Limited, 2023.

The name Usborne and the Balloon logo are Trade Marks of Usborne Publishing Limited.

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system or transmitted in any form or by any means without the prior permission of the publisher.

This is a work of fiction. The characters, incidents, and dialogues are products of the author's imagination and are not to be construed as real. Any resemblance to actual events or persons, living or dead, is entirely coincidental.

A CIP catalogue record for this book is available from the British Library.

ISBN: 9781801313346 7603/1 JF AMJJASOND/23

Printed and bound using 100% renewable energy at CPI Group (UK) Ltd, Croydon, CR0 4YY.

MY NAME IS SUNSHINE SIMPSON

G.M. LINTON

Illustrated by Fuuji Takashi and Emily Bornoff

Dariuszkz

Auntie Sharon

Granny Cynthia &
Grampie Clive

Mum & Dad

Meet my family – and welcome to my rollercoaster life!

Me (age 6)

Grandad Bobby

The Twinzies (Lena & Peter)

“Only when it is dark enough can you see the stars.”

Dr Martin Luther King Jr

Hello.

My name is Sunshine Simpson and I'm very pleased to meet you.

I don't entirely know why I'm starting the story this way, it just seems like a proper introduction. Polite.

Actually, I do know why I'm starting the story this way.
I want to ask you a question and I didn't want to launch into it by throwing myself at you too quickly. That seemed rude.

But now I've got the good manners part done, here goes...

Have you ever wished you had a magic button that you could press to play back all the best bits of everything that happens to you, but then delete all the bad bits that you don't like as much? I have, but no magic button has ever appeared. If it had, maybe my life would be different now.

I must warn you: there are no wizards or any magic fixes in this story to make everything better — although there are a few unicorns and a dragon (sort of). And there are things you'll find out that have changed my world for ever. I know that sounds a bit dramatic, but it's true — I've been through big-time drama of the highest order lately.

I should let you judge for yourselves really, so I'm going to get on with telling you what actually happened. It's always best to start a story at the beginning. Well, that's what my teacher, Miss Peach, tells me. She says a good story always has a beginning, a middle and an end. Miss Peach is very wise, despite being named after a fruit, so I'll follow her advice, and take you back to the beginning of last summer term, when everything started to go horribly wrong.

Focus. Power, I chanted under my breath. Focus. Power.
You've got this, Sunshine. You've. Got. This.

Near the start of every summer term, each class at my school takes part in a skipping fitness challenge. All the kids gather in their classes on the school playground and playing fields, kind of like a mini sports day, and have to do as many skips as possible in one minute, using posh skipping ropes with in-built counters. The top skippers from each class get to have their photo and name displayed on the Wall of Fame in the school hall.

The Wall of Fame is really called “the celebration wall”, and you get to be on it whenever you do anything great at school, but us kids have always called it the Wall of Fame to pep things up a bit. Give it a bit of star quality. Being good at skipping was my claim to fame. Maybe it was a small claim to fame, but it meant a lot to me.

Even though the teachers always said, “It’s not a competition, it’s the taking part that counts”, I’d won the “it’s not a competition” skipping challenge for two years in a row — so this time I was going for the hat-trick of three wins. But this time, as it turned out, was different.

You see, I have a friend called Evie Evans. She started at our school at the beginning of the school year, last September. And Evie is brilliant — at everything.

Evie was skipping next to me and my heart heaved in my chest as I desperately tried to keep in time with her. I could feel my pride and my title literally skipping away from me.

Pocus. Fower, I told myself again. Huh? My focus was un-powering or my power was un-focusing. Whichever one it was, this wasn’t a good sign.

I kept stealing glances at Evie. Watching her as she jumped effortlessly, leaping like a gazelle, with her ponytail of dark, bouncing curls bobbing beautifully behind her; not even the tiniest bead of sweat on her forehead. My forehead looked like someone could dive in and take a swim in it.

When the minute was up, I’d got dead-on one hundred skips — five skips down on last year. But Evie had got 106 skips — the most in the whole class (the most EVER). I was the washed-up runner-up. Evie had won.

“Don’t worry, Sunshine, you mustn’t be down in the mouth about this,” said Miss Peach, as she took a photo of a beaming Evie for the Wall of Fame. “It’s not a competition, it’s the taking part that counts.”

Right.

“It’s those long legs, Sunny. You’re very gangly, aren’t you.” Evie told me (she wasn’t asking). “You need to focus. Keep it all together so that you’re not flopping about all over the place. Keep your back straight like I do.

DON'T raise your legs too high. And DON'T look down at your feet.” Evie was giving me lessons, like she was the teacher and I was her pupil. If only she knew how hard I had been trying to focus. There was virtually smoke coming out of my ears.

My best friends, Charley and Arun, rolled their eyes, obviously very offended on my behalf. Charley and Arun always have my back. It’s a shame they couldn’t have held the skipping rope to help me go a bit faster too.

“I’m just not great at skipping any more, I guess,” I said, realizing that I was now holding on to a bucketload of hurt as well as the useless skipping rope.

I mopped at my brow and then held my hand out to shake Evie’s hand, fair and square. Evie made a squirmy face as she saw my sweaty palm approaching. And then, right on cue, accidentally proving the point that I wasn’t great at skipping any more, I tangled my legs in the rope, tumbling to the ground like a chopped-down tree.

Evie’s face lit up. “But you’re really good at being silly! I love that about you,” she laughed. “And your face goes all crinkly like an old lady’s when you’re concentrating on something. You almost put me off my skips! I’ll have to start calling you Silly Sunny.”

“Oh,” I said, and then laughed a ridiculous, exaggerated laugh back at her.

I wasn’t sure if I was meant to be offended or not. Crinkly old lady? I go to primary school!

And, yes, even though I am taller than a lot of other kids at Beeches Primary, and maybe because of that seem a bit older, I was sure I didn’t need to buy a trolley load of wrinkle cream just yet. Or maybe I did?

I decided to check in with my Grandad Bobby after school. I could talk to my grandad about anything, even about looking like my own grandmother!

“Aww, and the way you throw your head back so I can see all your teeth and down your throat...you’re kind of like a cute horse when you laugh.

I’m so glad that Miss Peach asked you to be my school buddy,” said Evie.

I immediately shut my mouth. A cute horse? Hmph! Next she’d lead me to the playing fields and start feeding me a bag of apples and a few carrots.

But instead of saying anything, I raised my hand to wave Evie off as she happily skipped over to Miss Peach (this time without a skipping rope). I assumed they were both about to skip off together into the school hall and remove me from the Wall of Fame.

“You would have beaten Evie if you didn’t keep looking across at her,” said Arun, helping to free me from my ropey prison, and lifting me to my feet.

“Yes,” said Charley. “You’re a great skipper. You’re good at lots of things, especially school stuff and gymnastics. Don’t let her put you off.”

I know you have to accept defeat as graciously as victory or whatever, but I’d been proud of being on the Wall of Fame. I’d never been the true champion of anything before. And, yes, Charley was right, I like school stuff — English and geography, even maths. But I had never been special, never particularly interesting. Even my gymnastics skills were basic. I could do the splits, one-handed cartwheel and a backwards walkover — which Charley seemed to think made me an Olympic champion like Simone Biles — but that was it. And now it was just a matter of time before I’d be erased from the Wall of Fame, replaced by Evie’s angelic, smiling face.

I stamped my foot, not meaning to seem bad-tempered; it was more to remove the remaining rope, which had now seemingly come to life and was snaking its way back up my leg. “I don’t let her put me off. I just need to raise my game,” I said.

My friends shrugged. And that was what I was going to do — shrug the whole horsey, crinkly-old-lady-face thing off and start all over again. Or so I thought.

I was Evie's official "school buddy".

She was new in town, so I'd been assigned to look after her when she started at school. I was meant to show her the ropes — but definitely not skipping ropes! It was more like where the toilets were, having lunch with her, teaming-up on school projects, that sort of thing. So life became all about Evie.

In the early days it was a dream. I really enjoyed hanging out with Evie and learned quite a lot about her. Like how her proper first name is Evonne, because she was named after one of her grandmothers.

Evie told me she didn't like her proper name because it was "soooo old-fashioned", and that, secretly, she immediately hated anyone (except her parents) who used it — even teachers! She said I was the only person she'd ever told about the secret hating thing. I mean, I actually thought it wasn't everyone else's fault that she was called Evonne and at least it was different, but I didn't say that. Instead I'd beamed, full of a secret I would never tell. I got the feeling that Evie had lots of secrets that she never told anyone about. But I was prepared to give her time to settle in, to win her trust, because I liked Evie and I thought Evie liked me.

Evie's favourite drink in the whole, wide world was hot chocolate with gooey marshmallows, cream and chocolate sprinkles on top, just like mine!

And we loved the same music. Evie would tell me what songs she liked to listen to on her phone. Yes, Evie had her own phone! I've always wanted my own phone, but could never persuade my parents to get me one. Evie had the best phone money could buy, by the look of it. It looked more expensive than a house! I wasn't envious I told myself, just appreciative.

Evie was great.

I'd overheard Evie's dad tell my grandad that their family moved up to where we live from somewhere called the Home Counties, because Evie's mum was "from this part of the world and she wanted to come home". They'd both managed to transfer their jobs, which had made the move easier. Evie's mum does important things with computers and her dad is a lawyer. And they both used to commute into the "big city" for work.

"Ooh, posh," said Mum when Grandad told her.

"Oh," I said. I'd never heard of the Home Counties before. And I didn't know what commuting into the big city meant. But it gave Evie — and her family — that additional air of mystery. I was loving it.

I like to learn about places, especially places I've never been to before, so I jotted it all down in my little notebook, where I write down Things and places of interest to look up later.

Our house is pretty busy — I live with my mum, dad and my twin brother and sister, and my mum's dad, my Grandad Bobby, also lived with us. But Evie only lives with her mum and dad since her older sister, Hannah-Jade, went to university in London and only visits in the holidays.

Even though Evie and her family had moved to be closer to her mum's relatives, I thought about how Evie was probably lonely without her old school friends and her sister, and what with leaving all she knew behind to come and live in the West Midlands. And I didn't want her to feel alone.

As it turned out, Evie may have been far away from the Home Counties, but she certainly made herself quite at home at Beeches Primary. She quickly turned into the star student in our class.

If you could make a model of a perfect student, they would probably look and act like Evie. She's really clever and everything about her is neat and tidy: perfectly ironed school uniform; two rows of perfectly straight, sparkling teeth; perfectly pouting mouth. Even the cool dark freckles on her warm brown face look like they've been neatly laid out on either side of her nose in a precise and perfect order. She has big brown eyes like luminous full moons beneath a lush forest of perfectly fluttering eyelashes. And her dark brown curls seem to bounce perfectly in time with her footsteps as she moves. She always ties her hair neatly away in a ponytail and wears a hairband to stop her curls falling into her eyes. But if I was her, I'd let my curls fly free. They're perfect too.

I know I'm using the word perfect quite a lot here, and I should be using a wider-ranging vocabulary, as Miss Peach would no doubt tell me. But it's true: Evie is practically perfect in every way.

I'm tall and lanky. I'm never quite sure what to do with myself, as my arms and legs keep getting in the way. It's like I've been stretched as far as I can go and never shrunk back again. Elastic-band girl. I get it from my dad. His height would make a giraffe bow its neck in adoration.

Evie holds her head high with such confidence. I wished I could do that. Even though my mum always said I should "stand tall and proud", I'd often stoop to make myself look a little shorter, just to feel like I was fitting in with everyone else.

And it was easy to sink into the background once Evie joined our school. That became clearer as the days went by.

