

THE WOLVES IN THE WALLS

WRITTEN BY NEIL GAIMAN
ILLUSTRATED BY DAVE MCKEAN

BLOOMSBURY

A surreal painting of a living room. A girl with long brown hair, wearing a pink and white striped shirt and dark pants, stands in the center. A boy in a red shirt and green pants lies on a red patterned rug, playing a video game. In the background, a figure in a blue coat stands in a doorway. To the left, a television on a stand shows a colorful scene. The walls are covered in intricate line drawings, and a large plant is on the right.

Inside the house everything was quiet.
Her mother was putting homemade jam into pots.

Her father was out at his job,
playing the tuba.

Her brother was in the living room playing video games.

Lucy heard noises.

The noises were coming from inside the wall.

They were
hustling noises
and bustling noises.

They were
crinkling noises
and crackling noises.

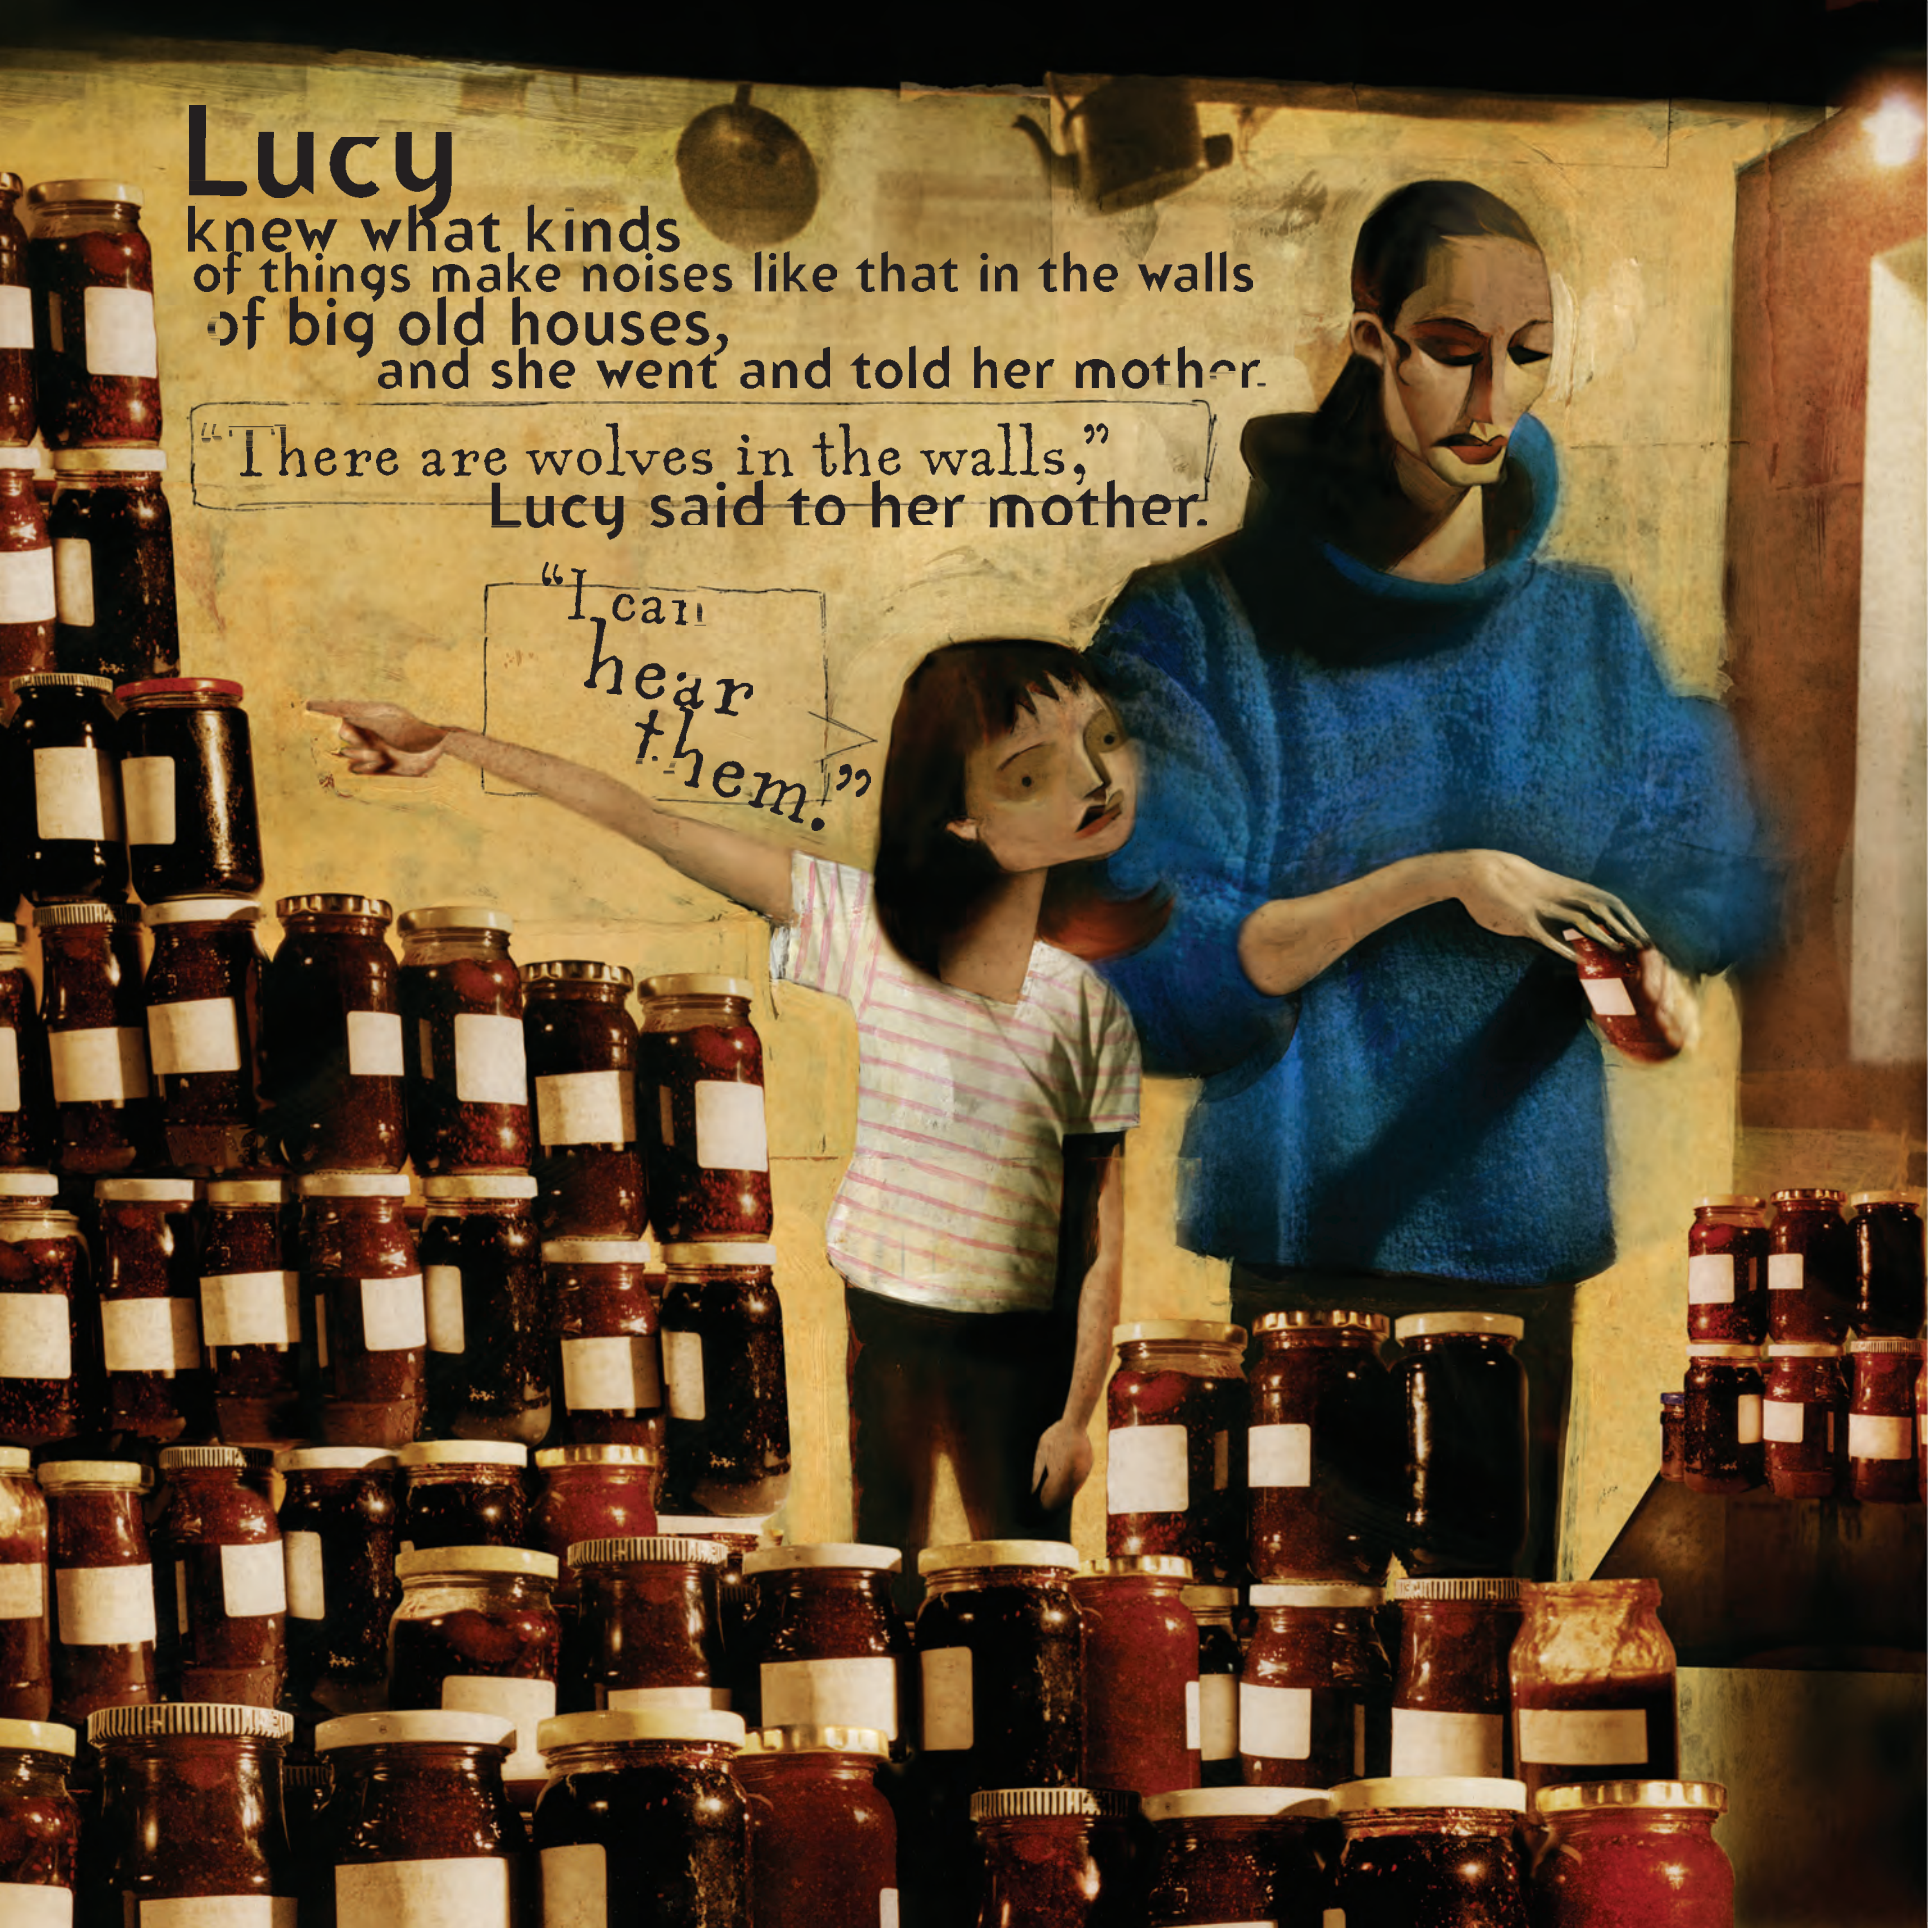

They were
sneaking,
creeping,
crumpling
noises.

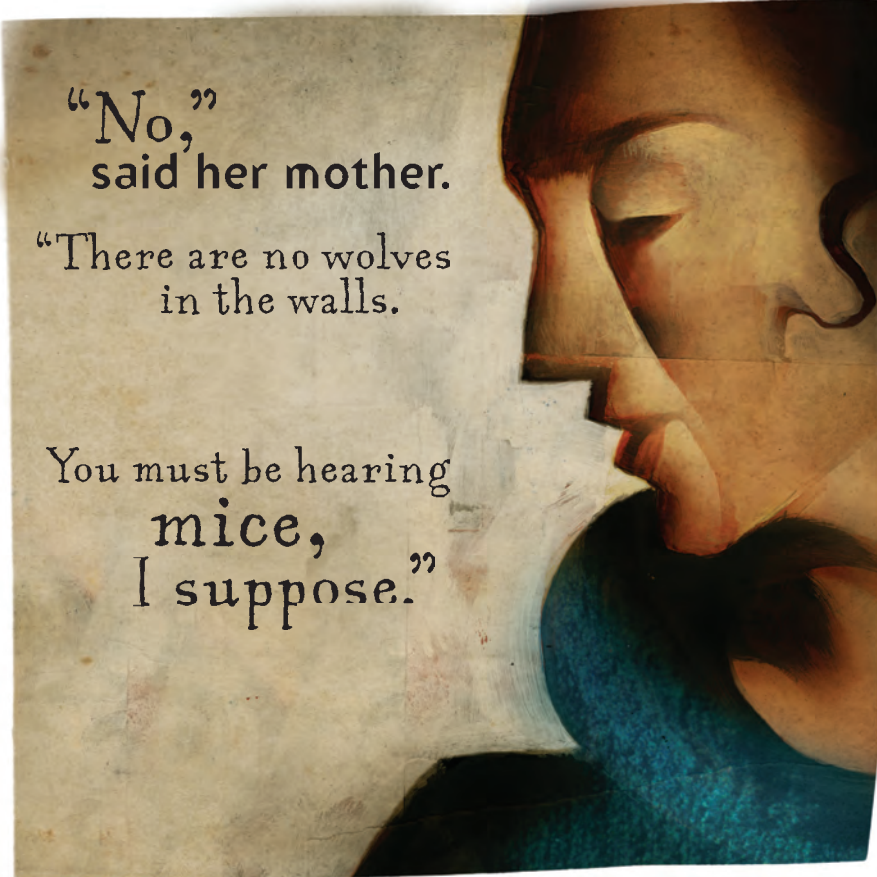

Lucy

knew what kinds of things make noises like that in the walls
of big old houses,
and she went and told her mother.

"There are wolves in the walls,"
Lucy said to her mother.

"I can hear them."

"No,"
said her mother.

"There are no wolves
in the walls.

You must be hearing
mice,
I suppose."

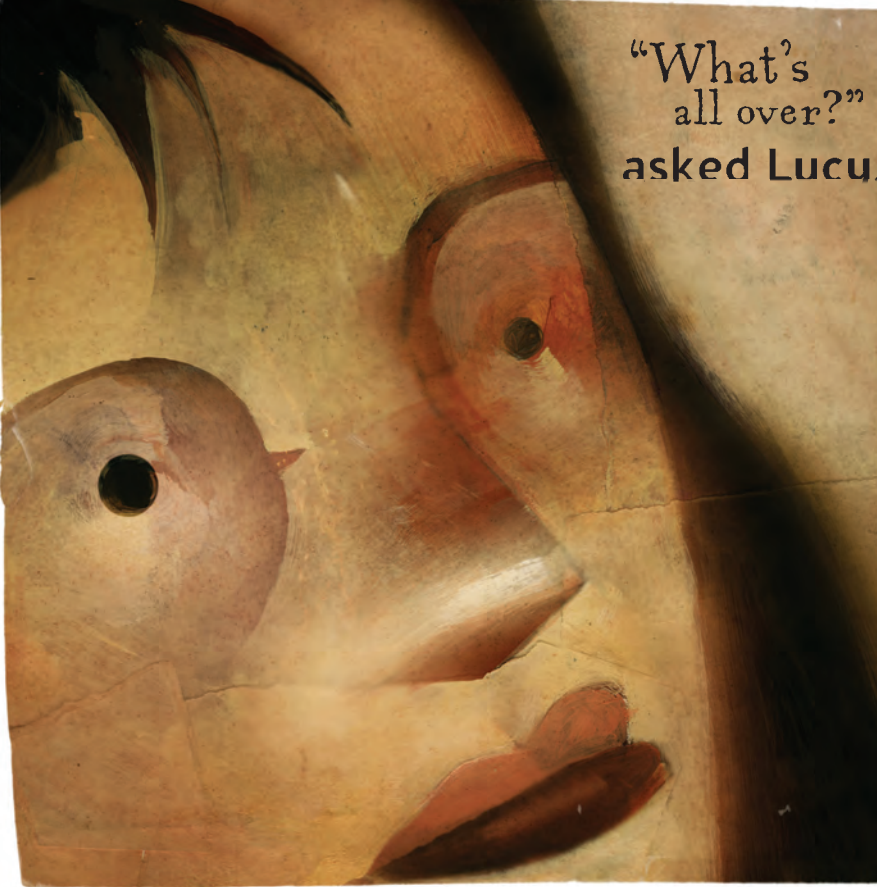

"Wolves,"
said Lucu.

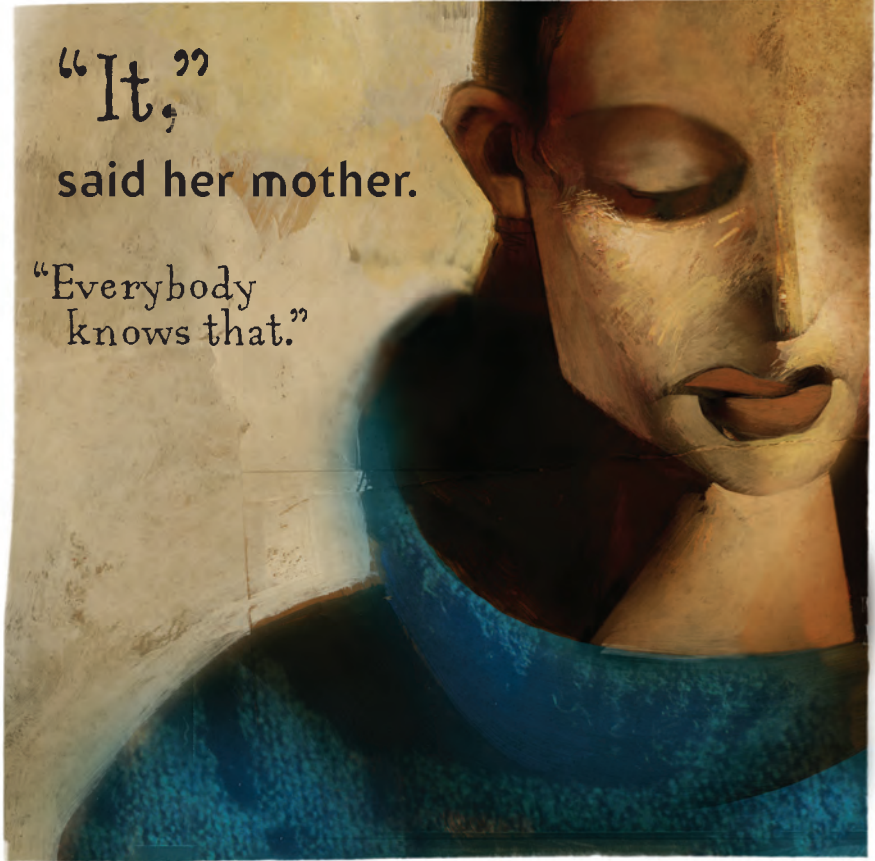

"I'm sure it's not wolves,"
said her mother.

"For you know what they say . . .

If the wolves
come out of the walls,
then it's all over."

"What's
all over?"
asked Lucu.

"It,"
said her mother.

"Everybody
knows that."