How to Build a Motte-and-Bailey Castle

- 1. Choose the site for the castle.
- 2. Hire a master builder to design it.
- 3. Hire 300 workers to build it.
- 4. Dig the ditch around the bailey, and use the soil to build the bank.
- 5. Build a wooden wall around the bailey.
- 6. Build buildings in the bailey.
- 7. Dig a deep ditch around the motte, and pile up the soil to form the motte.
- 8. Build a tower on top of the motte.
- Sit back and relax. You are now safe from your enemies.

Beside the motte, a large area of ground was surrounded by a ditch and a bank of earth. A wooden wall was built on top of the bank. This area was called the bailey. Several different buildings might be placed inside the bailey. Soldiers lived in barracks, while horses were kept in stables. The bailey might also include a church, offices, courthouse, workshops, kitchens or a great hall.

Nicola de la Haye Saves England

At a time when women had few rights, Nicola de la Haye inherited her father's land and his position as Constable of Lincoln Castle when he died. In 1217, French and English rebels overtook much of England. They tried to take Lincoln Castle. But, led by de la Haye, the castle did not fall. After reinforcements arrived, the attackers were defeated. This allowed the English king to remain on the throne

A Long Battle A siege could last months or even years.

When a siege took place, a castle became a very busy place. Hundreds of people from nearby farms and villages would come to the castle for safety, bringing their belongings. Tents and sheds were put up in the bailey along with large numbers of farm animals, carts, and tools.

The knight who owned the castle had to prepare for a siege. He brought huge amounts of food into the castle's storerooms. He made sure his soldiers had plenty of weapons and equipment. Riders on fast horses were sent out to look for the enemy approaching. When the enemy was seen, the gate was locked shut. No one could leave, and no further supplies could come in. The soldiers guarded the walls, ready to fight.

Castles had containers called cisterns that could catch rainwater. This gave defenders under siege enough water to drink. Some castles had an underground well for water, too.

Supplying Provisions

This picture on a manuscript from the 1300s shows supplies arriving at a castle.
