LONDON OXFORD NEW YORK NEW DELHI SYDNEY

Far, far away, in a magical land, the fairies had magical business in hand.

For all of them worked at the Wish Granting Plant,
where banners proclaimed,
'THERE'S NO WISH WE CAN'T GRANT!'

Fred worked inside the Department of Dresses,
where wishes for gowns
would arrive from princesses.

Fred would sit sketching and hoping each day,
that maybe, a wish-mail
might land in his tray.

He dreamed about helping a person in need,
a person, perhaps, just like Joshua Reed . . .

who sat in his bedroom and closed his eyes tight . . .

and sent out his wish-mail, one star-studded night.

*It whooshed in the wind and then, like every wish,
arrived at the plant, with a swoosh and a swish.*

Where drafting designs
in his dressmaking dreams, Fred watched while his workmates stitched sequins and seams.

Each of them hoped that they might win the crown of top princess-ball-gown designer in town.

They all tried their best to out-stitch and out-sew, but . . .
