

For Ezra, with love—L.M.

For Wendy Beautyman—K.B.

OXFORD
UNIVERSITY PRESS

Great Clarendon Street, Oxford OX2 6DP

Oxford University Press is a department of the University of Oxford.
It furthers the University's objective of excellence in research, scholarship, and education by publishing worldwide. Oxford is a registered trade mark of Oxford University Press in the UK and in certain other countries

Text copyright © Lily Murray 2024

Illustrations copyright © Kirsti Beautyman 2024

The moral rights of the author have been asserted

Database right Oxford University Press (maker)

First published in 2024

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted, in any form or by any means,
without the prior permission in writing of Oxford University Press, or as expressly permitted by law, or under terms agreed with the appropriate reprographics rights organization. Enquiries concerning reproduction outside the scope of the above should be sent to the Rights Department, Oxford University Press, at the address above

You must not circulate this book in any other binding or cover and you must impose this same condition on any acquirer

British Library Cataloguing in Publication Data

Data available

ISBN: 978-0-19-278883-2

1 3 5 7 9 10 8 6 4 2

Printed in China

The manufacturing process conforms to the environmental regulations of the country of origin

A DRAGON CALLED SPARK

A HANUKKAH STORY

LILY MURRAY

KIRSTI BEAUTYMAN

OXFORD
UNIVERSITY PRESS

Eva looked out of her bedroom window
at a new street, a new town,
and the children,
laughing and playing.
She wished she could join them, but she didn't know any of them yet.

It was nearly Hanukkah but it would feel very different this year,
with her friends so far away.

'Never mind,'
Eva whispered to herself.

'I've got something amazing, right here ...'

... Spark!

A dragon of her very own.

Spark was only small, but Eva always felt better when he was around.

She could see him now,
chasing spiders from under her bed,
his scales glinting in the light.

'Hanukkah's going to be quiet this year,' she told him.
And she thought Spark's light shone a little dimmer.

At breakfast, Spark didn't want any toast,
even with the chocolate spread.

'I think Spark's lonely,' said Eva.

'Maybe he needs a dragon friend to play with?'

'That would take a miracle,' laughed her older sister, Naomi.

‘Well,’ said Mamma, ‘Hanukkah is the season for miracles—
when even things that seem impossible can happen!’

‘Maybe this Hanukkah,’ thought Eva,
‘a miracle will happen
for Spark and me . . .’

The first night of Hanukkah,
Eva lit the flame.

She watched it glow, its colour
the same red-gold as Spark's scales.

Then Mamma put the Hanukkiah
in the window to light the dark.

‘Perhaps the other children in the street will see it . . .’ wondered Eva.

It was crispy cold the next morning.
Eva's breath misted the air,
just like dragon smoke.

On the way to the park, they passed the boy from next door.

‘I’m Charlie,’ he said, smiling. ‘I saw the candle in your window last night.’

‘It’s for Hanukkah. We light a candle every night, for eight nights.’

She wanted to tell him about Spark, too, but the words wouldn’t come.

‘I’ll look for the candle again tonight!’
Charlie called, as he scooted away.