Eid for Nylah

written by

Everyone was very busy at home.

Sweeping and dusting,

wiping and scrubbing,
tidying and sorting
everything in sight.

The whole family was helping ...

except for Nylah the cat.

“Oh, Nylah!” said Zahra.
“We’re all so busy. We don’t have time to play now.”

Poor Nylah!

Outside on the street,
it was still and calm.

The night was dark and quiet.

High above, the moon was a tiny bright crescent in the sky.

And there were warm lights in the windows of the house next door ...

Nylah jumped in through the window of Bilal's house.

Everything was sparkly and colourful!

Bunting and streamers,
balloons and lanterns,
all of it so festive and bright.

Then Nylah saw
the best thing of all...

Ribbons!

Nylah pounced.

She nibbled
and leaped
and rolled.

But then...

“Oh, Nylah!” said Bilal.
“We’re all so busy. We don’t have time to play now.”

He untangled
the ribbons and Nylah padded away.

Poor Nylah!

Next, Nylah slipped into Reem's house.

Nylah breathed in a rich, leafy smell.

Henna!

Swirls and circles,
flecks and flames,
patterns painted
carefully on their hands.
