

Messy threads

A poem is a messy thread you pull out from your brain and use to stitch a picture to make some sense again you take the thoughts all jumbled up and sew them into lines until your stitches make a shape and you're left feeling fine and if you read a poem that someone else has sewn the pattern might be quite like yours and you'd feel less alone so pull those messy threads out and weave them into art and you'll be left with tidy brains with space for thoughts to start.

Signs

Have you ever seen a feather softly floating from the sky and watched your parents pick it up then smile and happy cry?

it's because they feel these feathers are signs from someone dear someone we can no longer see but our love keeps them quite near and some people choose pennies and see these as their sign that angels in the heavens are requesting them to shine for some it's redbreast robins who chirp a caring song is it the song our loved ones sing are these birds passing it on?

and rainbows drawn in colours across the rain-drenched sky are often someone's happy sign that loved ones are close by all these signs bring comfort when we feel far apart reminding us that love is all we need to heal our heart.

Summer is funner

Summer is funner, everyone can agree. The trees are in full bloom and nature is riotous, colourful and almost as ecstatic as leaving school for summer holidays. Summer is ice-creams and late nights, where even the sun doesn't seem to want to go to bed. It is life at its most lifelike, summer. As though all the other seasons are just preparing us to be here in this moment, running through sprinklers and eating ice-cold watermelon. Picking daisies for our hair, birds singing their encouragement as we play and the feeling we could run and jump the entire summer day.

Summer is funner. And the only thing to do when summer is upon you, is throw your hands up in the air and jump in.
