Upon this spot, in days of old, A mistle thrush, so I've been told,

He sang of bees and butterflies, Of morning dew and azure skies, Of maidens dancing at the fayre With daisy garlands in their hair.

Soon the Harvest Moon would glow And paint the fields in gold below.

He sang of carpets on the ground, Of crisp, bright leaves in red and brown, Of fattened pigs with rounded bellies, Of nuts and seeds and wild berries.

Next the winter winds would blow And from the north there came the snow.
