In our old home, I knew where everything was.

Cereal was on top of the green cupboard.

Bowls were on the shelf beside the sink.

Joe-Dog's bed was underneath the table.

the shady spot beneath my favourite tree,
where Mum waited for the bus

I knew my way around our neighbourhood:

where to get Granny's almond biscuits,

and the shortcut to school.

and the streets outside were like a jumble of spaghetti.

The world seemed big and much too scary.

Mum helped me draw a map so I could get around.

But important things were missing from that map.

Mum said my map was too small to show things far away.
