Meet the Pharaoh

Bata and his family are from the New Kingdom period of ancient Egyptian history (over 3,000 years ago).

Wearing a double crown means that the Pharaoh rules both Upper AND Lower Egypt.

On ancient Egyptian statues, carvings and paintings kings were always shown with beards.

It was a symbol of just how important the king was.

The king's beard wasn't real.

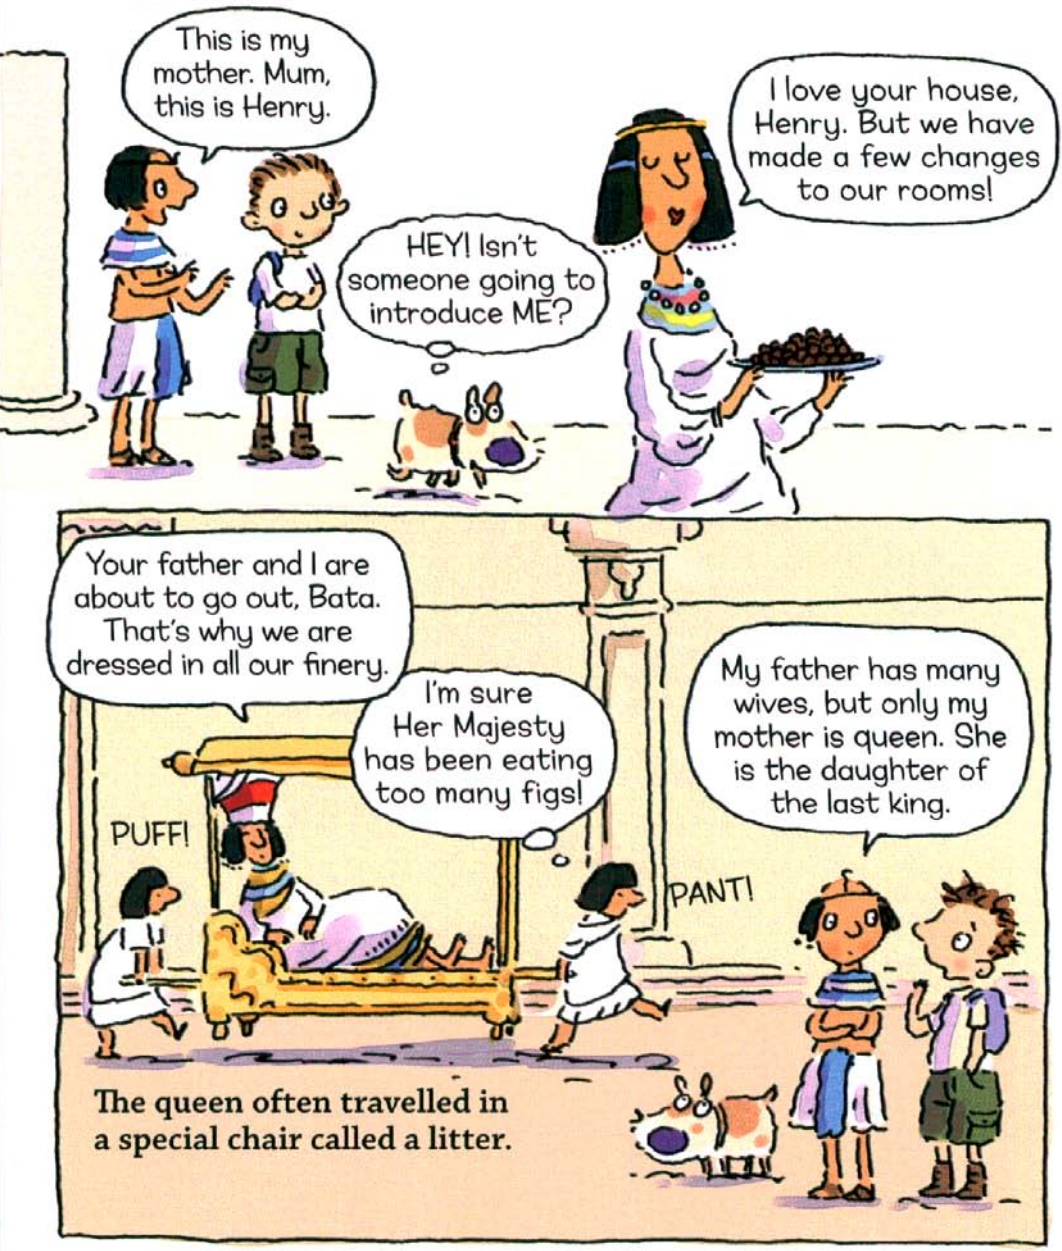

Why's that woman fanning Bata's dad with ostrich feathers? Couldn't they just turn the heating down?

Even some female Pharaohs wore fake beards!

Royalty on the move

The queen often travelled in a special chair called a litter.
