Big Bear didn't reply. He had sensed a storm suddenly approaching.

"We must go!" he said. "Walk close to me, as quickly as you can. My body will protect you from the wind."

On the ice, with the wind blowing gently, Big Bear stopped running. How wonderful it was to be still . . . to close his eyes . . . to dream!

Suddenly he heard a cry from the cliff above. Who was it? Was it a hunter? He looked up quickly.
