One night
there was a knock at our front door.

I opened it and there
he stood – Mammoth.
As big as the biggest truck and hairier than a yak.

Mammoth had been woken from a many-thousand-year slumber by the rumbling and grumbling of his hungry belly.

Mammoth was much too big to get in our front door.

He put his trunk
through the window
and I fed him fish
fingers and peas,
straight from the freezer.

He slept in the garden.

But he flattened Dad's shed.
