

DEADLY DANGEROUS
KINGS AND QUEENS

KARL SHAW

A&C Black • London

Published 2012 by A&C Black
An imprint of Bloomsbury Publishing Plc
50 Bedford Square, London, WC1B 3DP

www.acblack.com
www.bloomsbury.com

ISBN 978-1-4081-6568-3

Text copyright © 2012 Karl Shaw
Illustration copyright © 2012 Chris Altham
Copyright © 2012 Bloomsbury Publishing Plc
Designed by Marcus Duck

The rights of Karl Shaw and Chris Altham to be identified as author and illustrator of this work have been asserted by them in accordance with the Copyrights, Designs and Patents Act 1988.

A CIP record for this book is available from the British Library.

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced in any form or by any means – graphic, electronic or mechanical, including photocopying, recording, taping or information storage or retrieval systems – without the prior permission in writing of the publishers.

This book is produced using paper made from wood grown in managed, sustainable forests. It is natural, renewable and recyclable. The logging and manufacturing processes conform to the environmental regulations of the country of origin.

Printed and bound in Great Britain by CPI Cox and Wyman, Reading, RG1 8EX.

1 3 5 7 9 10 8 6 4 2

CONTENTS

The kings whose names nobody could spell	1
The king who made a list	3
The king who died in a hunting ‘accident’	7
The king who was killed by a fish supper	10
The king who killed an archbishop	13
The king who was never there.....	17
The king who lost the crown jewels in the wash.....	19
The king who hammered the Scots (and the Welsh) ...	22
The king who won the ‘most gruesome death’ award..	25
The king who banned football.....	29
The king who was a waste of space	33
The king who married a witch	37
The king with the very bad haircut	39
The king who had his nephews murdered.....	42
The king who employed his own bottom wiper	46
The queen who burned people alive.....	51
The queen who had a bath once a month whether she needed one or not	54
The king who was afraid of his own shadow	61

The king who was 5' 4" at the start of his reign but only 4' 6" at the end of it	67
The king who partied	72
The king who was killed by a mole	76
The queen who was as wide as she was tall.....	79
The king who spoke only German.....	82
The queen whose bowels exploded.....	84
The king who talked to a tree	89
The king who ate all the (pigeon) pies	92
The king with the pineapple-shaped head.....	96
The queen who hid from her subjects	99
The king who shot things	103
The queen who stole things	106
The king who barely was	109
The king who cured his stammer (but not his smoking habit)	112
The queen who went up a tree a princess and came down a queen	114
Timeline.....	118
Glossary	122
Index.....	124

THE KINGS WHOSE NAMES NOBODY COULD SPELL

Before 1066 the English crown, the oldest in the world, was worn by various Egberts, Eadwigs, Aethlreds, Aethlwulfs, Aethelbalds and Ethelstans, none of whom was very memorable because nobody could agree how to spell their names.

To be fair this wouldn't have bothered many of their subjects, because very few of them could read or write anyway. Besides, they had more important things to worry about, like coping with disease, or famine, or how to avoid getting hacked to death by those vicious Viking invaders who were running around the country, murdering and looting at will.

There was just one king whom everyone remembered. Out of this spelling nightmare emerged Alfred 'the Great' (although in fact he was only the king of half of England – the southern bit, as far north as the Midlands). Alfred was a strong king who stopped the Viking raids by building a navy and a well-trained army. He also tried to rule fairly and encouraged people to learn. There wasn't very much Alfred couldn't do. He was pretty rubbish at baking, but TV cookery shows were another 1100 years away so people didn't really care if he burnt cakes or not.

For a while England was peaceful and happy, but when Alfred died things went downhill again. The country was ruled by more weak kings – most of them with difficult names. England was in an almost constant state of civil war due to pushy local barons who thought they could do a better job than the king.

Meanwhile, to make matters even worse, the Vikings started raiding again, because England was now a dangerously divided kingdom and a great target for attack. In 1042, England found itself under yet another useless king, Edward 'the Confessor', who spent most of his time praying instead of improving England's defences.

By now most people were thinking the same thing.

'If only we had another strong king like Alfred, someone who doesn't take any nonsense from anyone. Then we could all have a bit of peace and quiet.'

Be careful what you wish for!

THE KING WHO MADE A LIST

William I was descended from a much-feared Viking warrior called Rollo, a man who was said to be so big that there wasn't a horse strong enough to take his weight. William had a lot of Rollo's Viking character. His idea of fun was skinning his enemies alive then chopping their hands off.¹ William was just the sort of person to knock some sense into those silly, feuding English just across the channel.

William already had a dodgy claim to the English throne as a distant relative of Edward 'the Confessor'. He had a stroke of luck in 1064 when the future King of England, Harold, was sailing down the English Channel and his ship blew off course and landed in Normandy. William took Harold prisoner and tricked him into swearing an oath of loyalty to William over a pile of saints' bones, hidden under a table. Harold did as he was told, but then forgot all about it when he got back home. When ¹ He did this once to some people who insulted him by calling him the son of a tanner's daughter – which was another thing he was very touchy about. A tanner worked with leather by soaking it in dog poo.

Edward 'the Confessor' died in 1066, Harold had himself crowned King of England. William was furious; now there was some conquering to be done.

William and his army landed on the beach at Hastings on 28th September. William's bad temper was made even worse when he tripped as he stepped off his boat, fell headfirst onto the beach and swallowed a mouthful of sand. Nobody laughed.

However, the showdown with Harold would have to wait, as Harold's army were in the north of England fighting off yet another Viking invasion. Harold won, but some of his best men were killed and the rest of the army had to trek all the way back down south.

By the time they got to Hastings they were already exhausted. William meanwhile was having a good time chilling on the beach, throwing the odd peasant on the barbecue.

Harold's army came very close to winning, but in the end tiredness took its toll and they were defeated. Harold was killed by an arrow through his eye, but the Norman soldiers also cut his head off and chopped his arms off – just to make sure. By the time they had finished, Harold was so badly mutilated that his wife Edith couldn't identify him.

William was crowned king on Christmas Day in Westminster Abbey. A cheer went up as the crown was placed on his head. The Norman guards outside thought something had gone horribly wrong, so they started attacking the crowd and set fire to several buildings.

William's first job as the new king was to take his army on a tour of England to let everyone know who was in charge. They destroyed everything in their path. If anyone complained, the punishments were terrible. However, another thing William did was get rid of capital punishment.

'Hurrah, no more hangings!

'That's right. I'm going to chop off your hands and blind you instead. I want you alive so everyone can see who they're messing with'

When William stopped blinding people and chopping their limbs off long enough to draw breath, he thought that it might be handy to have a list of everything he had just conquered. In 1086 he sent out a team of surveyors to compile a great book of every single bit of property in his new kingdom – the Domesday Book.

Sadly, William didn't live long enough to enjoy reading it (not that he could read anyway). At the ripe old age of 60, after surviving a lifetime of almost endless warring and bloodletting, he was riding through the streets of a town he had just burned to the ground when his horse stumbled on some hot cinders, giving William fatal injuries.

His funeral was even crazier than his coronation. William had grown very fat and the stone coffin prepared for him was too small. After a lot of poking and prodding as they tried to cram him in, his bowels burst open, filling the church with an 'intolerable stench' and the mourners fled for the doors.

This time people did laugh.