Once upon a time, a little girl lived
with her mother at the edge of the forest.
Everyone called her Little Red Riding Hood because her grandmother had made her a little red cape and hood and she loved it.
In fact, she never took it off.

"But there are so many flowers here,"
said the wolf.
"I bet your Grandma would love a bouquet.
You really ought to stop and pick a pretty bunch for her."
"That's a great idea!" exclaimed Little Red Riding Hood.

She set down her basket and began picking wild flowers. (She had forgotten her promise not to dilly-dally along the way.)
The wolf already had a plan to have her for his lunch!

At that very moment, a strong young woodsman was passing by, and he heard the commotion.

He broke down the door with his axe, just in time to stop the wicked old wolf and knock him out!

Then the woodsman zipped open his stomach, and there was Grandma, safe and sound! Little Red Riding Hood gave her grandmother a big hug.
