Sugarlump was a rocking horse.
He belonged to a girl and boy.
To and fro, to and fro,
They rode on their favourite toy.

"Here in the children's bedroom
Is where I want to be.
Happily rocking to and fro.
This is the life for me!"

"Done!" came a voice, and there stood a beast
With a twisty silver horn.
"I can grant horses' wishes,"
Said the snow-white unicorn.

She pawed the ground and tossed her mane
And flashed her eyes of blue.
Seven times she turned around
And the horse's wish came true.

But time went by and the hills grew hard.
Sugarlump hung his head.
"Oh to be free of this heavy load.
I wish I could gallop!" he said.

"Done!" came the voice of the unicorn,
And she flashed her eyes of blue.
Seven times she turned around,
And the horse's wish came true.
